Amelia Watersfield loves a good mystery. In fact, she's one of the founding members of the Ladies Amateur Sleuth Society, dedicated to their fictional hero, Sherlock Holmes. On the shelf due to her advanced age of twenty-eight, she's decided to focus on her own mystery writing. However, in order to tell a good story, she first needs to experience some adventure.

Enter Inspector Colin Brindley, a brooding, handsome, intelligent private investigator who bears a striking resemblance to her beloved Sherlock. Well, how she's imagined him at least. When her eccentric father hires the young inspector to find his missing Nefertiti statue, Amelia sees her chance. She just has to convince Colin that he needs her help in solving the crime.

Ms. DeHart weaves a delightful tale of romance blossoming in the face of a 19th century-style mystery. Her heroine, Amelia, is spunky and outgoing. And who can't resist a smart, sexy man? This book is perfect for those looking for pure escapism with a little whodunit.
